WITH Melbourne hospitals reporting higher than average births in the past year, households are set to channel their inner child and become more baby-friendly.

Irish-born author Tizzie Hall hints that a bigger baby boom could be on its way.

"In Australia, the month most babies are born is September, because everybody gets a bit hanky-panky ... around New Year's Eve. In Ireland it's December because everybody forgets about contraception on St Paddy's night," she says, laughing.

Hall has released her first book, Save Our Sleep, which is the culmination of connecting with babies all her life.

with babies all her life. She attributes her knowledge to being raised in Ireland. "It was in a place where they had very big families, and I started being like a big sister to every baby in the area and before long I was babysitting every single baby," Hall says. "Any baby that cried, I was

"Any baby that cried, I was handed over to calm down and help them stop crying – it was like I just had a gift and a knack with babies from the age of about nine."

She says everyone is able to read a baby's communication when young, but she has "stayed in contact with babies every single day of my life".

"My book covers how to breastfeed, how to bottle-feed, how to get your baby to sleep all night, how to take your baby on an aeroplane ... People have described it as a baby manual," Hall says.
